Continuation of 11, does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Applicant first argues that Kochansky does not disclose "providing a first data structure object representing a receivable, the receivable being unlinked to a cond data structure object representing a collateral agreement." However, there are multiple ways to "link" a receivable to a collateral agreement. Therefore, a receivable is "unlinked" when one of the methods of linking has not yet occurred. As explained in the most recent office action, Paragraphs 0048-0049 of Kochansky disclose that collateral held as credit is available for further credit support, but is unlinked until it becomes collateral pledged, which means it is turned over to cover the exposure. At the point it becomes pledged collateral, its linked. Unless Applicant uses language in the claims that makes it clear what is meant by unlinked and linked, the terms must be interpreted in a broad but reasonable manner.

Applicant next argues that Kochansky does not disclose "applyingement" as gobal declaration of purpose to the receivable to determining whether to link the receivable to the collateral applyingement." As explained in the most recent official, Kochansky uses criteria to determine whether to transfer collateral from collateral held as credit (i.e., "available for further credit support") to collateral judgeded (i.e., "collateral interest to transfer collateral from collateral held as credit (i.e., "available for further credit support") to collateral related to the collateral area of the coll

Applicant next argues that Kochansky does not disclose "direct link." As explained with regard to Applicant's first argument, there are many ways to create a direct link and one way would be change collateral from collateral held as credit to collateral pledged. Because the specification and claims of the instant application do not specify what is meant by "direct link," the term must be interpreted to mean any type of direct link.
